My Barrier!

My barrier in my life is having my dad gone for a year or more. He is gone very long because he is in the U.S Army. He usually works in the office, or goes on missions to fight. All this takes place on the other side of the world in Iraq. I have experienced this worried feeling that is hard to even explain in words.

There are so many words to get me through this experience but I like three words to get me through. One of these words is courage, because I can't talk to him much because he is so far away & also he doesn't have the time to talk. Another reason to have courage is not having a dad around for a year is not easy. I also have to have commitment to my dad to take care of the house, my mom & sister. There is one more word that gets me through this barrier, determination. I use this word value because I have to stay focus on my work & not worry so much about my dad. I use these three words to get me throw this barrier.

I think Jackie Robinson & I But have something alike. Like the words we use to get us through our barriers. I My favorite word that Jackie & I use is courage. I use courage because I can't talk to my dad much, & Jackie Robinson uses courage at the moment when the bus driver said go to the back of the bus Jackie replied back no. I felt like Jackie Robinson had the guts to say no because we had courage. I think Jackie Robinson & I are alike even though we go through are hardest, darkest moments, because we have courage to get us through.

This is a very big barrier for me. But I always get through. I just want to say I would love to win this contest because I have never experienced a baseball game. I believe & have confidence that I might win. But I know that so many are trying to win it's like a one & a million chance to win. But who knows who will win this contest. Anyways thank you for having the time to read my story, I hoped you loved it, Thank you.
